

Well an adulterer likens himself to King David. A quote from the article:

--South Carolina Gov. Mark Sanford got back to work Friday, but first he had some more apologizing to do.

---In his first public event since he revealed his mistress in Argentina, the Republican governor met with state agency heads in what is usually a low-key Cabinet meeting. He specifically apologized to the agency leaders that handle economic development trips and his security, and likened his struggle to that of King David.

---The governor, who talked about "moral absolutes" and God's law during his revealing, yet rambling news conference Wednesday, said King David "fell mightily, fell in very, very significant ways, but then picked up the pieces and built from there."

What a story! It amazes me that when something goes wrong in a person life that they have to bring up God in some fashion. Why? Why not blame themselves for the action?

Read the story!!

King David "fell mightily, fell in very, very significant ways, but then picked up the pieces and built from there."

SEO by Artio